

Symposium Dutch Castle Foundation and ICOMOS Netherlands

WHAT? WATER!

Climate change and country houses

LIVESTREAM | THURSDAY 27 MAY 2021

When it comes to climate change and water, heritage is barely in the picture. An important reason is that the heritage and water world do not know each other sufficiently. Institutional, political and especially when it comes to research and science, there is little common ground. ICOMOS Netherlands and the Dutch Castle Foundation want to change this and show the important role heritage can play in sustainable solutions. Innovative adjustments have already been made at various country estates. Join the conversation and be inspired.

Contribution to participate is € 10. Students can register free of charge. After the symposium you will receive a video link to the recording of the livestream and a summary of the symposium. Note for international participants: Please note that the symposium will be held in Dutch. After the symposium we will send all attendees a video link of the live stream with subtitles in English and an abstract also in English.

LIVESTREAM

Dutch Castle Foundation and ICOMOS Netherlands will present this symposium on Thursday 27 May via a live stream.

Researcher Dr. Elyze Storms-Smeets, special associate professor for Cultural Heritage and Spatial Participatory Development at Wageningen University & research, and Prof. Eric Luiten from Delft University of Technology, are experts in the field of water management and landscape. They will each shed light on the topic symposium from their own expertise. Furthermore, four case studies will be presented.

Fred Vogelzang and Charlotte van Emstede will introduce the speakers and moderate the discussions. The symposium will be concluded with a round table discussion with the speakers and several experts. Questions can be asked via live chat.

After the symposium, there will be an opportunity to chat in small groups in break-out rooms with the speakers and researchers.
